Dear Dr. Thomas:

Thank you for the first-rate, acclaimed presentation you delivered at The Expo 2012. The feedback from attendees says it all. They could not get enough of what you had to offer. They raved you were “absolutely fascinating,” and “funny, entertaining and gracious in answering our questions and staying way after the session had ended.”

I witnessed how they clamored for your attention when the session was over and you took the time to answer their individual questions. It was an impressive scene. They could have listened to you all day, appreciating how you added stories about your personal life, which always enhances a talk.

As one actor noted, “I have taken various types of personality tests in the past, yet what made Dr. Thomas’ ideas so different is that they were simple and easily understood. She reached out to us as actors and demonstrated how knowing our personality styles can help us in learning a character better and obviously being more organic and real in a role.” That your message would also enhance their relationships with the people with whom they work, such as directors, co-stars and crew was another significant benefit gained.

The consensus was that what they learned in your character development workshop, incorporating your theory of the biological basis of personality, will help them become more self-aware, better in their craft, and better able to relate to others.

We hope that you will return for The Expo 2013 and wow everyone again! Please feel free to use us as a reference in your marketing materials.

Warmest regards,

Lolita Burrell, Chief Operating Officer
